Abstract

This book is a sociological examination of modernity, and more specific a macro-sociological look at modern civilization of modernity as it was proposed by Max Weber and half a century later was refined and developed by the most important follower of his work, Shmuel

Eisenstadt. This development, which communicates with both the renewed neo-structuralism and the Marxist school, is rather unknown in Greece, both among scholars and students of modernity, especially with regard to modernity in civilizations beyond the West.
